ARGUMENT.

THE Opera of "Euryanthe" was composed by Weber to a Libretto written by Madame Helmine von Chezy. It was first performed in October, 1823, and in London (in German) in the year 1833.

ACT I.—Counts Adolar and Lysiart are both in love with Euryanthe, the betrothed of the former. At a festival, given by the King to celebrate the return of peace, Adolar sings in praise of the love, beauty, and virtue of Euryanthe, who is not present. Lysiart wagers his lands that he will gain her love, which challenge Adolar accepts. The scene changes to Nevers, where Eglantine obtains from Euryanthe a knowledge of her love-secret, only known besides to Adolar, and falsely promises never to reveal it. The scene concludes with the arrival of Lysiart and other Knights to fetch Euryanthe to the King's festival.

ACT II.—Eglantine, who has remained at Nevers, steals a ring which has been confided to Euryanthe as part of the love-secret. She imparts this to Lysiart, who is deploring his want of success in gaining Euryanthe's love, on his promising to wed her. The scene changes to the King's palace, where Adolar and Euryanthe are again united. Lysiart, by his knowledge of the love-secret and his possession of the ring, persuades the King and Adolar that he has gained Euryanthe's affection. Her denial is unheeded, and the King gives Adolar's lands and title to Lysiart.

ACT III.—Euryanthe is led into the desert to be slain by Adolar. He is attacked by a gigantic serpent, and Euryanthe throws herself in its way to die instead of her lover. Adolar slays the monster, and refuses to kill Euryanthe, leaving her to the mercy of Heaven. The King, who is hunting near, finds Euryanthe alone, and hears from her how Eglantine obtained the secret, and, feeling that he had been deceived by Lysiart, swears to administer justice. The King at once starts for Nevers, where he arrives just as Adolar, supported by his vassals, has confronted the bridal procession of Eglantine and Lysiart. Adolar, who sees in the marriage a proof of guilt, and by what he overhears from Eglantine, declares to the King his belief that Euryanthe was the victim of a plot, but is informed that it is too late to save her, as the hunters are bearing her apparently dead body to the Castle of Nevers. Eglantine on hearing this derides Lysiart, saying that she only wanted to get rid of Euryanthe to claim Adolar's love. Lysiart stabs her. Euryanthe recovers from her trance, and is reunited to Adolar, and Lysiart is led away to die for his perfidy and murder.
