LA SONNAMBULA.

The progress of incidents in this opera, in which is to be found the loveliest, most characteristic and most perfect flowering of Bellini's genius, is as follows : In a Swiss village there live two lovers, Elvino, a well-to-do farmer, and Amina, an orphan who has been adopted by Teresa, owner of a mill. The betrothal of the pair is greeted with delight by all the villagers except Lisa, keeper of the village inn, who is herself in love with Elvino and eager to win him away from Amina, to the sorrow of her own lover, the peasant Alexis. The village folk are rejoicing over the happiness of Amina and Elvino, and greet them with a song ("In Elvetia non v'ha rosa") through which are heard the complaints of Lisa. Amina sings her joy and gratitude to Teresa in a cavatina ("Come per me sereno"), and while the witnesses are signing the marriage contract Elvino places the ring upon the finger of the bride ("Prendi: l'anel ti dono"), and accompanies it with a gift of flowers. In the midst of the merry-making Count Rodolpho, the lord of the manor, enters. He is on his way to the castle, and recalls the scenes in which he has passed his youth in a cavatina ("Vi ravviso, o luoghi ameni"). But night is falling ; he has still three miles of a dangerous pathway to traverse, and he accepts Lisa's invitation to spend the night at the inn. Meanwhile he learns the cause of the pretty gathering, and, Amina's beauty calling up memories of a youthful love, he pays her a few gallant attentions which disturb the mind of the gentle Elvino. Lisa warns the villagers to hasten to their homes lest they catch sight of the phantom which nightly roams through the village. Rodolpho is incredulous, and the villagers in chorus tell him the tale of the ghost whose presence arrests the flow of the mill-stream, stops the fountain and closes the mouths of the watch-dogs. ("A fosco cielo.") Elvino gives utterance to his jealous doubts and receives comfort from Amina in a duet ("Son geloso del zeffiro errante"), while the Count is shown to his chamber in the inn by Lisa. There, finding her not disinclined to a little flirtation, he starts in upon some gallantries which are interrupted by a noise at the window. Lisa conceals herself in a cabinet, but in her haste drops her veil. The cause of the interruption amazes the Count. Through the window, to which she had ascended by a ladder, comes Amina, clad in her night-robés. She is asleep, and fancies herself with Elvino, whose jealousy she is seeking to disarm. Rodolpho recognizes the somnambulist, who next enacts the marriage scene with Elvino and pledges him her love. She then goes to bed, and the Count, having decided not to awaken her, is about to leave the chamber by the door, but hearing footsteps goes out by the window. The intruders are the villagers, who, having learned that the stranger is their lord, come to welcome him. They surround the couch and discover Amina. Meanwhile Lisa steals out and brings Elvino on the scene. Amina is aroused and seeks to throw herself in the arms of her lover, but is cast aside despite her protestations of innocence.

Thus ends the first act. At the beginning of the second the villagers are discovered on their way to the castle, where they hope to receive assurance from the Count that the story of Amina's guilt is groundless. They receive it, but Amina, meeting Elvino, is again repulsed in the aria, "Tutto è sciolto." Then follows a scene in the village between Lisa and Alexis, in which the latter pleads his cause only to be again rejected, just as the villagers appear to proclaim, joyously, that Elvino and the hostess are to be married. Elvino seeks consolation in the thought that he is but returning to an old love, but the Count appears and disturbs his contentment by explaining that Amina was walking in her sleep when she came into his chamber on the preceding evening, while Teresa intimates that whatever of guilt there was at the inn must be charged against Lisa, and produces the veil in evidence. In the midst of the consternation produced by this announcement and Teresa's pleadings that Amina's rest be not disturbed, the somnambulist, again in a sleep-trance, comes out of a window of the mill, crosses a frail bridge, and advancing sings of her lost love and its relics—the ring and the nosegay Elvino had given to her ("Ah! non credea mirarti"). Elvino is convinced of her innocence; she is awakened and leads the jubilation of the villagers with the rondo, "Ah! non giunge uman pensiero."

According to the hand-books this story was borrowed by Romani, Bellini's librettist, from a vaudeville written by Scribe. The point does not seem to be well taken. The vaudeville was performed at the Théâtre du Vaudeville in Paris on December 6th, 1819. Scribe is also credited with having constructed a ballet out of the vaudeville for which Hérold composed the music in 1827. The story, however, is probably older than the French author. As early as 1778 Lady Craven, afterwards the Margravine of Anspach, published an English translation of a French comedy, written by Pont de Vile (or de Vesle), under the title "The Somnambule; or, The Sleep-Walker." Paér and Piccinni composed operas entitled "Sonnambula" in 1797, and they were performed in Venice and Stockholm. Romani himself provided librettos (or a libretto) for two composers before Bellini—Carafa, whose "Sonnambula" was produced at Milan in 1825, and Luigi Ricci, who brought out his "Sonnambula" in Rome in 1829. A vulgar farce entitled "The Sleep-Walker; or, Which is Which?" was performed for the first time at the Hay-market Theatre, London, in June, 1812, and reached New York the next year. In London the principal character, Somno, a servant, was enacted by G. C. Mathews (the elder); in New York the part was played by Mr. Roberts, a comedian who enjoyed great popularity. The climax of both performances was reached in a scene in which Somno in his sleep imagined himself an actor, and gave imitations of Kean, Booth, Macready and other great players of the day.

"The Somnambulist; or, The Phantom of the Village," a play by Moncrieff, was acted for the first time at Covent Garden, London, on February 19th, 1828. Like nearly everything of its kind it crossed the ocean without delay. Three months later, on May 22d, 1828, it was performed at the National Theatre, with Mr. Placide and Mrs. Hackett in the principal characters. Its scene is laid in Provence, but the story is that of Bellini's opera, with a few trifling variations.

Bellini's opera was composed in January and February, 1831, and performed for the first time at the Teatro Carcano, Milan, on March 6th of that year. The principal parts, Amina and Elvino, were sung by Pasta and Rubini, for whom they were written. The same singers carried the work to London (King's Theatre), where it had its first performance on July 28th, 1831. Paris heard it on October 28th, 1831, and New York, at the Park Theatre, on November 13th, 1835. This first American performance was in English, the English fashion, influenced, no doubt, by familiarity with Moncrieff's play and a tendency of the period which made Malibran as much a singer in English as in Italian opera, having been set by that supremely great artist when she appeared in an English version of the opera especially made for her at Drury Lane on May 1st, 1833. Bellini's star was in the ascendant and near its zenith when "La Sonnambula" appeared, yet London hesitated to accept him, as it had hesitated to give hearty welcome to Rossini a few decades before, because of its conservative admiration for Paisiello and Cimarosa, and as it refused a welcome to Verdi a decade or so later because of its devotion to Rossini and Bellini. "'La Sonnambula,'" says Mr. Chorley in his "Thirty Years' Musical Recollections," "was treated on its introduction with contempt; the want of science on the part of its composer dwelt on, and that which is true in expression, and which has kept the opera alive, utterly overlooked." The prejudices of the critics, excited by the notoriously small musical scholarship of Bellini, were soon overcome, however, by the popular appreciation of the elegiac tenderness of his melodies, and "La Sonnambula" soon became the most admired opera in the Italian list. Many musicians meanwhile confessed to an affection for Bellini's melodic genius sufficiently great to work atonement in their minds for his harmonic poverty. Chopin made little of most of his Parisian contemporaries, going so far indeed as heartily to dislike the music of Meyerbeer, but Bellini's music charmed him, while a caviller who came to Cherubini with the complaint that Bellini's orchestration was very simple and his accompaniments meagre received the reply: "What other accompaniments could be written to melodies so beautiful in themselves?" Even Wagner, before he became possessed of the furor Teutonicus which led him to the invention of a new style of musico-dramatic composition, could rail against his German colleagues in round terms and hold up Bellini as a model. In an article signed "O.," which appeared in the "Zuschauer" of Riga on December 19th, 1837, he wrote: "What enchanted us in Bellini was the pure melody, the simple nobility and beauty of song. Surely it can be no sin to assert and believe this. Perhaps it is not even a sin if before retiring to rest one offers a prayer to heaven that it may some day occur to German composers to write such melodies, to acquire such treatment of song. Song, song, and again song, O Germans! Song is the language with which mankind should communicate, one with another; and you will not be understood if this language is not made and kept as arbitrary as any other cultivated language should be. That which is bad in Bellini, each one of your village schoolmasters will do better. If Bellini had served his apprenticeship with a German village schoolmaster he would probably have learned more, but he would have unlearned the art of song." The popularity acquired by "La Sonnambula" seventy years ago scarcely waned so long as the type of singer called for by its measures flourished. Commenting on its introduction in America, Mr. Richard Grant White wrote: "'La Sonnambula' was the delight of all music-loving people, cultivated and uncultivated, from North to South, from East to— But then there was no West. Nothing but 'Still so gently o'er me stealing,' or 'Hear me swear, now,' was heard from the throats of singers, the fingers of pianoforte thrummers, and even the lips of whistlers; for never before was there such a pathetic puckering."

All the singers at the first American performance of the opera were members of the stock company of the Park Theatre, except Mr. and Mrs. James Wood. These artists were English, Mrs. Wood being none other than Miss Mary Anne Paton, who began her artistic career as a child. She was a performer upon the harp, pianoforte and violin, and the creator of the heroine in Weber's "Oberon" when that opera was produced by the composer in London on April 12th, 1826. The composer wrote to his wife: "Miss Paton is a singer of the very first rank, and will play Rosina divinely." Together with her second husband, Mr. Wood (her first marriage to Lord William Pitt Lennox, younger son of the Duke of Richmond, was an unhappy one), she first visited the United States in the season of 1833-'34, and was hailed as the finest English vocalist ever heard in America, "a verdict," said Ireland, the historian of the New York stage, "that no successor has been able to overthrow." Unfortunately, her second season, 1835-'36, in which "La Sonnambula" was brought forward, came to a disastrous end, owing partly to a want of tact on the part of herself and her husband, and the spirit of national pride at the time rampant in American audience-rooms. Mrs. Conduit, who sang the part of Lisa at the first performance of the opera, was an American woman (she came from the South), and a popular member of Mr. James W. Wallack's regular company. In the progress of the season a performance for her benefit was announced. Mr. and Mrs. Wood not only refused to take part in it, but gave a concert on the same evening, thus ruining the business of the beneficiary. On their next appearance at the theatre the audience got into a riotous mood and demanded justice for Mrs. Conduit. The management promised that she should have a second benefit, and the performance was permitted to proceed. At the next appearance of the English singers, however, there was another disturbance, and they thought it wise to return to England. Five years afterward they returned to the United States, and were singing in Philadelphia when confronted by another benefit. Anxious to redeem her former mistake, Mrs. Wood volunteered to sing for nothing; but as the time approached Mr. Wood became apprehensive of another demonstration, and, having involved himself disagreeably otherwise, he sailed for Europe with his wife and did not again return.

The list of singers who have won triumphs in the role of Amina is practically the list of all singers of the florid style who have flourished in the course of the last half of the nineteenth century. When Madame Pasta created the part, the distinction between light and dramatic sopranos, now so marked, was less determinate. What was then looked upon as dramatic or tragic expression was not thought to be inconsistent with flexibility and volubility of utterance. According to present notions Madame Pasta would seem to have been the last singer whom Bellini should have selected to sing the music which he put into the mouth of his rustic heroine. Her voice was naturally a heavy one, and, in spite of all her efforts it never became wholly fluent. She was a tragic queen, and, like many a tragic queen in this day of vocal degeneracy, she sang flat occasionally, especially toward the end of her career. But Bellini, though essentially a disciple of Rossini, was a devotee of expression in music. If he wrote an Amina for Pasta, he also wrote a Norma, and belief in the dramatic potency of the songs given to the Druidic priestess is still held by some exemplars of the latest phase of dramatic singing—as witness Madame Lehmann. Even the restrictions of natural vocal register were felt less two generations ago than now. One of the finest Aminas was Malibran, who set the fashion of singing the part in English. Her voice was contralto, to which she had ingeniously superadded a soprano register which enabled her (like Alboni later) to sing contralto and soprano rôles with equal effectiveness. However, it was not the range of her voice so much as its timbre, her magnetic temperament and her passionate acting, which raised her to the well-nigh peerless position which she occupies in musical history. Of her performances in "La Sonnambula" we have the opinion of a musician, Möscheles, who wrote: "She was thoroughly realistic, and in her dress and movements despised everything conventional. Thus, in the sleep-walking scene, unlike other great representatives of the part whose muslin négligé would have suited any lady, she adopted the bona-fide night-cap of the peasant girl and the loose garment of a sleeper; her tricot stockings were so transparent as to veil her feet but imperfectly. Her acting in this opera was exquisitely touching, her outbursts of sorrow so natural that she enlisted the sympathy of her audience from beginning to end of the piece." A similar devotion to realism, or dramatic truthfulness, impelled Jenny Lind to forego the customary assistance of a "supernumary" in the final scene, in which the somnambulist walks across a frail bridge and seems in imminent danger of death. "I should have been ashamed to stand before the audience pretending I had crossed the bridge if I had not really done it," she said to one of her biographers. But it was not only this and her exquisite singing which placed "La Sonnambula" high amongst Madame Lind's achievements, but the gentleness and simplicity of her characterization of Amina. In this respect, I fancy, Madame Etelka Gerster's impersonation—certainly the finest vouchsafed to Americans to see and hear in their own country—must have resembled hers. Neither in voice nor in style was Madame Gerster grand, but she charmed with the gracefulness, smoothness and exquisite finish of her execution, the perfection of her musical taste, the nobility of her portamento, the purity and equability of her tone, and the fascinating naïveté of her appearance and acting. Touching the manner in which Jenny Lind sang the exquisitely touching "Ah! non credea," we have the opinion of a royal critic. In her diary Queen Victoria wrote: "It was all piano, and clear and sweet, and like the sighing of a zephyr; yet all heard. Who could describe those long notes, drawn out till they quite melt away; that shake which becomes softer and softer; those very piano and flute-like notes, and those round, fresh tones which are so youthful?"

It was the purpose of the style adopted by Bellini to elevate the pathos of his melodies by curtailing the redundant ornamentation which Rossini had cultivated. Singers, however, were still steeped in the old traditions, and Messrs. Holland and Rockstro, in their biography of Jenny Lind, have preserved her reading of "Ah! non credea" in full. I append the concluding flourish as an interesting comparative lesson in taste. Bellini wrote:

Jenny Lind sang (in moderate tempo):

From the modern viewpoint, which considers vocal agility as the first requisite in parts like Lucia and Amina, Madame Persiani was probably the most efficient of the Aminas of the first half of the nineteenth century. She was more than anything a vocalist—a singer of the Di Murska type. What pathos she had was of the elegiac kind, and consequently adapted to the music of "La Sonnambula." Her execution was "remarkable for velocity—poignant, clear, audacious," wrote Chorley, and John Ella notes that the broderie in "Ah! non giunge" which follows, when sung by Persiani, was immensely effective :

"La Patti," Mr. Ella adds, "more recently introduces very surprising fioriture in the same aria, totally beyond the ability of any amateurs. The passage I now print is gracefully conceived, and by transposition may be repeated by any skilful vocalist." Madame Adelina Patti used to sing "Ah! non giunge" in concerts when she was eight years old, and "La Sonnambula" was the second opera of her first season at the Academy of Music in New York, on December 3d, 1859. She chose it also for her début in London and Paris. Concerning the part of Elvino, it ought to be remarked that much of its music has been transposed since Rubini sang it. Rubini was a counter-tenor. He was wont to sing the Allegro portion of "Tutto è sciolto," which now stands in B-flat, a fourth higher, accomplishing this feat (as the tenor part is printed nowadays) in the climax :

A musical score for piano, featuring two staves. The top staff uses a treble clef and has a key signature of one sharp. The tempo is marked as 'pp' (pianissimo). The bottom staff uses a bass clef and has a key signature of one sharp. The tempo is marked as 'p' (piano). Both staves begin with a rest followed by a series of eighth-note chords.

A musical score for three voices (Soprano, Alto, Bass) in common time, G major. The vocal parts are written above the basso continuo part. The lyrics are in German, with some words in English. The vocal parts sing in unison at the beginning, then split into two parts for the middle section. The basso continuo part provides harmonic support with sustained notes and bassoon entries.

A musical score for two staves. The top staff is in treble clef and has a key signature of one sharp (F#). It contains eight measures of quarter note chords. The bottom staff is in bass clef and also has a key signature of one sharp (F#). It contains eight measures of eighth notes.

A musical score page featuring a single staff in bass clef. The lyrics "cor! Ah! day! Ah!" are written below the staff, corresponding to the notes. The music consists of a series of eighth and sixteenth note patterns.

A musical score page featuring a soprano vocal line with lyrics "cor! hail!" in both German and English. The vocal parts are supported by an accompaniment consisting of sustained notes across all four staves.

The musical score consists of four staves. The top staff is for the soprano voice, the second for the alto, the third for the tenor, and the bottom for the bass. The piano accompaniment is provided by the fourth staff. The vocal parts sing in homophony, while the piano provides harmonic support. The vocal entries correspond to the lyrics written above each staff.

another direction.)

The continuation of the musical score follows the same structure as the previous page. The vocal parts sing the same lyrics in homophony, and the piano provides harmonic support. The vocal entries correspond to the lyrics written above each staff. The piano accompaniment features sustained chords and rhythmic patterns. The instruction "another direction)" appears in the middle of the page, likely indicating a change in the performance or stage direction.
