SIR HENRY BISHOP'S OPERAS

By F. CORDER.

THE name of Sir Henry Bishop, though a household word in the ears of all English lovers of music, is not associated by the present generation with any kind of stage entertainment, save that one or two of his most hackneyed songs are occasionally dragged into feeble operettas, where their undying freshness and vigour present only a too glaring contrast to the flaccidity of their surroundings. We all know "Bid me discourse," "Tell me, my heart," "Should he upbraid," and I fancy that a few of my readers must have heard "Home, sweet Home"* and "My pretty Jane." Thanks to the admirable cheap editions of Messrs. Novello, nearly the whole of the contents of Sir Henry Bishop's nine volumes of collected Glees and Choruses are not only extant but in the highest degree popular in the present day. But his operas? Why, these are his operas, or at least, the best and largest portion of them.

I suppose that most of my readers are aware that until about half a century ago opera in England meant nothing more nor less than a farce or melo-drama with just so many songs and choruses stuck in as the piece would bear without being absolutely killed by them. Owing to this pleasing and artistic method of procedure the only chance of immortality for a work was for one of the two component parts, play or music, to be very good and the other very bad; the two elements were utterly incongruous and could not survive together to a more enlightened age. Such invertebrate pieces as "The Quaker," "The Waterman," and "No Song, no Supper," have lived through their music, while the "Forest of Bondy," "The Miller and his Men," and many other excellent plays have been completely divested of their unnecessary music, and enjoyed long lives as melo-dramas pure and simple. This is another proof of the truth of Wagner's oft-made assertion that the old form of opera—a play with incidental music—is an incongruity and an anomaly. Music and drama may be excellent separately, but it is just when they are excellent separately that they refuse to unite, and, when forced into conjunction, are both inartistic and unsuccessful.

To begin with a few biographical details, it may here be stated that Henry Bishop was born in London on November 18, 1786, and died at the age of over 68, on April 30, 1855. His first production was an operetta, played at Margate in 1804, and his last an ode for the installation of the Earl of Derby as Chancellor of Oxford in 1853, scarcely a subject which "yearned for musical expression," but it procured him his degree of Mus. Doc., a distinction which doubtless cheered his last days.

Bishop's works for the stage, consisting of ballets, operas of various calibre, and arrangements, testify to his industry, being about ninety in number. The following is a complete chronological list:—

1804, Angelina (Operetta). 1806, Tamerlan and Bajazet (Ballet), Narcisse et les Graces (Ballet), Love in a Tub (Ballet), Caractacus (Opera). 1808, The Mysterious Bride. 1809, The Circassian Bride, Mora's Love, The Vintagers. 1810, The Maniac, or

* Referring to the remarks upon this air in THE MUSICAL TIMES of November there is little doubt that it is Bishop's very own, all family resemblances notwithstanding. It was only called "A Sicilian air to fill a gap in a volume of national music edited by him

JSIC.

April 28.

To morrow is the first performance of my so called rival's opera; Aladdin. I am very curious to hear it. Bishop is certainly a man of talent, but without any originality of invention. I wish him the best success; we all have room in the world.

God bless you, my dearly beloved. How often do I count days, hours, minutes to our meeting again. We have been separated before, and surely have always dearly loved each other, but THIS longing now is indescribable.

April 30.

Yesterday was an interesting day; the first representation of my so called rival's opera, Aladdin. It was so crowded, that hardly any tickets could be got. But one of the proprietors offered me his box and even made me a call. We all dined at home, and then drove to Drury Lane. I had hardly entered the box and been seen, when the whole house rose and received me with the greatest enthusiasm. This, in a different theatre, on this day, showed the love of the nation, and it affected and rejoiced me very much.
