Chorus of Brownies.

When midnight's gloomy hour did toll,
We brownies from our covert stole;
For many things must needs be done
Before should rise the coming sun.
But first we tripped on footsteps light
Where, on her pillow snowy-white,
The lovely maiden sleeping lay,
Now dreaming of her wedding day.
We blessed her as she slumbered there,
And made her beauty e'en more rare.
Then each one to his work did fly;
Some borrowed azure from the sky
To lend the violet richer hue,
Some perfume in the rose-cups threw,
Some scattered daisies o'er the grass
Where her light foot was soon to pass.
We decked the holy shrine with flowers
Culled from the freshest, sweetest bowers.

The East grows bright — our labors end.
Come, festal day, thy gladness send!

Chorus of Skylarks.

Hail! Hail! All Hail!
Shine out, O sun, in thy splendor!
Rise, cloudy mist, from the vale!
Joyous, our carol out-pouring,
Hail to the morning, — all hail!

Brushing the dew from the grasses,
Soaring aloft to the sky,
Singing our paens of gladness
Upward to heaven we fly.

O day of joy and of rapture,
Bright be the swift-passing hour,
Sweet with the breath of the roses,
Radiant with Summer's dower!

Shine out, O sun, in thy splendor!
Rise, cloudy mist, from the vale!
Joyous, our carol out-pouring,
Hail to the morning, — all hail!

Hail! Hail! All hail!

The Watchman. (Tenor Solo.)

Awake! Awake! The bell's clear note
In sweetest cadence soon will float
Aloft to heavenly portals.

As the lark to heaven soaring
Floods the trembling air with song,
So your hearts, His praise out-pouring,
Should to God alone belong.
Let every heart and soul arise
On wings of prayer to Paradise!
Awake, and own His gracious love,
Who rules the earth from heaven above.
Awake! Awake!

Chorus of Skylarks.

The bride awakes from slumber,
Opens her azure eyes,
Visions fair surround her
And every sorrow flies.

Hark! The bells are ringing!
To the church ye now must go;
Haste! ye maidens, o'er her tresses
Fling the veil like virgin snow.
Hide the blush upon her cheek!
Her lover comes, his bride to seek.

The Church Bells. (Chorus.)

Come ye here! Come ye here!
Heaven's gate stands open wide, —
Come ye here! Come ye here!
Enter and be satisfied.

Come ye here! Come ye here!
See thy friends to each so dear
Now before the holy shrine
Seek a blessing all divine.

May they tread life's thorny way
Free from evil day by day,
Blest in mutual care and love
May they ever look above,
Seeking there a purer joy
Undefiled by earth's alloy!

Chorus of Students.

(passing by)

We're young and jolly students,
We know nor fear nor care;
All blithely on our way we go
With spirits light as air,
But as we sing our merry songs
Our hearts with longing swell,
For when shall we see home again?
What one of us can tell?

Although we fain would linger
These dear delights we shun, —
For love and home may not be ours
Until our journey's done.
And so we wander through the world,
But ever as we roam,
One haunting strain rings through our song —
The thought of love and home.

Chorus of Bridesmaids.

Strew in her pathway the beauteous flowers,
Lilies, violets and roses!
Speed with gay music the fleeting hours
Till night her portal closes!
Throw back the veil from her beauty so rare,
Grant not a moment to sorrow!
E'en as to-day, no trouble nor care, —
Joyous be every to-morrow!

A Bridesmaid. (Mezzo-Soprano solo.)

We who have loved thee through all these bright years
Sigh as we think thou must leave us.
Hence with the sighing! Yield not to tears!
Naught the day brings shall grieve us!
Join in the dance with the new-wedded pair,
Grant not a moment to sorrow!
E'n as to-day, no trouble nor care, —
Joyous be every to-morrow!

Chorus of Bridesmaids.

Strew in her pathway the beauteous flowers,
Lilies, violets and roses!
Speed with gay music the fleeting hours
Till night her portal closes!
Throw back the veil from her beauty so rare,
Grant not a moment to sorrow!
E'en as to-day, no trouble nor care, —
Joyous be every to-morrow!

A Sibyl. (Alto Solo.)

Away! Away! Let silence reign!
For while ye dance and sing
A lonely heart must throb with pain,
And love through suffering.

Where lofty pines their shadows throw
And sigh from night till morn,
He wanders idly to and fro,
Forsaken and forlorn.

His draught of joy was all too brief,
The dream too quickly flown,
His aching breast knows only grief,
And he must mourn alone!

Oh thou, unhappy, passion-tossed!
Bear thy heavy woe!
They who e'en have loved and lost
A soothing balm can know!

The Forest Trees. (Chorus.)

Come to the forest's friendly shade,
Lift up thy drooping head!

The Sibyl.

Before thee now, through every glade
A path of peace is spread!

The Forest Trees. (Chorus.)

All ye who bow 'neath sorrow's burden,
Weary, sad, with care oppressed,
Hither come, and find in coming
Peace and rest.

In these shades so dark and quiet
Let thy lonely footsteps stray;
Here will all thy sore afflictions
Pass away.

Spirit of the Night. (Bass Solo.)

The glowing sun doth sink to rest,
The twilight shadows fall.
Each bird has sought its quiet nest,
And peace reigns over all.

The Forest Trees. (Chorus.)

O hear the song the pines are singing,
Counsel sweet as to a friend;
"Earthly joys and earthly sorrows
Soon will end."

Mother Nature, all-consoling,
Brings thee balm for every grief;
Trust her love, and she will give thee
Sweet relief!

Spirit of the Night. (Bass Solo.)

O Nightingale, let thy sweet song
Float on the evening air;
Thy strain can soothe each bitter wrong,
And lift each load of care.

Nightingale. (Soprano Solo.)

Cease thy repining!
Still for thee shining
God's blessed sunshine so wondrous fair!
Earth in its beauty
Calls thee to duty,
Out of the gloom of thy bitter despair!

Rouse thee! Awaken!
Thou'ret not forsaken!
While the heart beats there is work to be done.
Soon will thy sadness
Turn into gladness,
If thou wilt hope and in patience strive on!

The Forest Trees. (Chorus.)

Look up to Heaven!
To thee is given
Help that will strengthen thy desolate heart.

Rouse thee! Awaken!
Thou'ret not forsaken!
God's love is with thee wherever thou art!

Serenade.*Chorus of Villagers.

From many a latticed window,
Aflame with sparkling eyes
That brighten with enchantment
When thoughts of home arise,
Come voices sweet and tender
Upon the fragrant air;
We hear them as we laugh and shout
Amid the torches' flare.
Hurrah! Hurrah!

We hear them as we march away,
And village lights grow dim,
While heaven's torches far above
Illume the forest grim
And send the magic of their light
Into her woodland home;
We'll send a song of ecstasy
That from our hearts will come.
Hurrah! Hurrah!

Sing to the forest maiden,
Thou bride of a woodland shrine!
May happiness and sunshine
Be now forever thine!
To him who shares thy rapture
We joyous wishes bring
Of all that is encompassed
By a golden wedding-ring!

Good night, good friends, good night!
Now we homeward light our way.
Good night, and again, good night!
Oh, the honey-moon shines for aye!
Good night! Good night!

The second system begins with a forte dynamic, with the piano accompaniment providing a rhythmic foundation. The vocal parts sing "giv - - en Help, help that will strength - - en that will" three times. The third system continues with the vocal parts singing "giv - - en Help, help that will strength - - en that will" three times. The piano accompaniment maintains its rhythmic pattern. The fourth system introduces lyrics for the piano: "strengthen thy des - o-late heart. Rouse thee! A - wa - ken! Thou'rt not for - en thy des - o-late heart. Rouse thee! A - wa - ken! Thou'rt not for - strengthen thy des - o-late heart. Rouse thee! A - wa - ken! Thou'rt not for -". The piano accompaniment provides harmonic support throughout.
