PREFACE.

1^(A) An explanation of the settings of the Kyrie in this service may not be unnecessary. The ancient Kyrie consists of the threefold repetition of

Kyrie eleison. (Lord, have mercy upon us.)

Christe eleison. (Christ, have mercy upon us.)

Kyrie eleison. (Lord, have mercy upon us.)

The reasons for this arrangement are given in an old treatise:—The appeal for mercy is made to each Person of the Holy Trinity, because we sin against each; and thrice to each, because we offend in thought, word and deed.

2^(A) The above Kyrie in its English form was retained in the First Prayer Book of King Edward VI., and its use is not unknown in the church of England at the present time, through the translation into English of certain Latin Masses. As the ‘Benedictus qui venit’ and the ‘Agnus Dei’ have been largely restored among us, it is difficult to understand why the Kyrie proper should be overlooked. A setting of it is contained here (Kyrie I.).

3^(A) The Responses to the Commandments may be treated in two ways — either as a substitute for the Kyrie proper or as Responses to a Lesson. In the former case, there should be a change in the music after the fourth and seventh commandments (see Kyrie II^A). If the Kyrie proper be sung, the Responses to the commandments may be conveniently sung to an adaptation of the plainchant of the Litany (Kyrie II^B). In any case, the settings Nos I and II^A should not be used together, for liturgical and perhaps musical reasons.

4 In the Kyrie proper the original Greek words are retained and not translated into English. It seems quite consistent that words, which were retained in their original form when Latin took the place of the more ancient Greek, in the services of the Western Church, should now be retained, although the Latin tongue in our portion of the Western Church, has, in its turn, given way to the English.

5 The words in question are a beautiful link also with all ages of the Christian Church, east and west and are perfectly understood by ordinary churchgoers. Seeing that Christmas Carols with Latin refrains are used with approval in church and entire Latin works, such as settings of the 'Stabat mater' are frequently sung, either as anthems or as independent musical performances, it is hard to see how any valid objection could be urged against the use of these few Greek words.^(B)

If sung before the Communion Office begins, the Kyrie proper would be nothing more than an Introit. Where the Introit proper is in use, the Kyrie would naturally follow it and one would be just as admissible as the other.

^(A) From the preface to Dr Agutter's service "Missa de Sancto Amphibalo," with the composer's kind permission.

^(B) The writer is informed that settings of the "Kyrie Eleison" in the original Greek words, are sometimes sung as Anthems in Cathedral churches.

The musical score for "Kyrie eleison" (No 1) is composed for voices (1st and 2nd Trebles) and organ. The tempo is slow, indicated by $\text{♩} = 80.$ The score is divided into five systems, each consisting of three staves: 1st Trebles (top), 2nd Trebles (middle), and Organ (bottom). The vocal parts are written in treble clef, and the organ part is also in treble clef. The dynamics are marked with pp, ff, dim., and cresc. The vocal parts sing the words "Ky - ri - e" and "son, Ky - ri - e" in the first system, followed by "lei - son," "Ky - ri - e" in the second, "Chris - te" and "lei - son," "Chris -" in the third, "te" and "lei - son," "Chris - te" in the fourth, and "lei - son," "Ky - ri - e" in the fifth. The organ part provides harmonic support throughout.
